IV., Read the article and decide whether the following statements are true (T) or false (F)

Why are the British so bad at learning languages?

Michael Reece has lived and worked in France for 15 years. The British are bad at speaking foreign languages. It's a fact. In any city around Europe you can find British tourists asking for the restaurant menu in English. At best they will try to say a couple of phrases they have learnt from a phrase book, but they will stop making an effort the moment they discover the waiter knows a little English.

I read a survey once which found that only 5% of British people could count to 20 in another language. So why is this? I think laziness is possibly the key factor. There is a general feeling among British people that 'everyone speaks English nowadays so it's not worth learning other languages.' In multinational companies English is often the communication within the company. Also, British people who live abroad can always find other British expatriates to talk to, to watch British TV with, even to go to British pubs with - all reasons for never bothering to learn the local language.

The situation in British schools doesn't help. Ten years ago, about 80% of children at secondary school studied a foreign language. Today, that number has gone down to 48%. And even the new pupils who study foreign languages at school don't have as many hours of classes as pupils in other European countries. I think it is also a problem that British children don't study English grammar any more, which makes it more difficult for them to learn the grammar of another language.

1. British tourists don't even know a few phrases in another language.
2. For the British there are several reasons for not studying foreign languages.
3. British people who live abroad don't often socialize with the local people.
4. Many British secondary school pupils don't study a foreign language.
5. Studying grammar is an important part of the British education
